Q: What was the reason that you chose this diagnostic tool?

Separate Essay Assignment	High quality of this tool
	I felt it most closely related to the course SLO #2, giving me information on which students would benefit from assistance to achieve that goal.
	I purposefully didn't want it attached to any other assignment so students could feel less pressured.
	I use it as an opportunity for students to practice paragraph structure before the first essay as well as a diagnostic tool (it counts as a journal assignment even though its written as a short essay).
	I used a short essay at the beginning of the semester so that I could evaluate the skills with which they came into the course.
	I wanted to see how well students could respond to a prompt, construct a thesis, and build an essay. I wanted to see what skills they brought with them to 101.
	It was the most honest tool, I felt!
	Wanted to test reading and writing skills with one assignment.
First Essay Draft	We were told to do this.
	It didn't produce any more work for me or students, and it needed to get done.
	It fits the existing design of my course, and the timing is perfect .
Discussion Board Post	It was the most convenient and also the best chance to see what the students were capable of.
	It occurs very early in the course, which enables sooner identification of those who need additional support.
	It was already present in the class, and it gives me a good sense of their sentence skills.
Homework Assignment	It was the earliest writing assignment
	It gave a more comprehensive idea of the student's current ability and potential needs early in the course.
Paragraph From Journal	It is a reflective mini-essay (2-3 pages), so I think it is less threatening than a full essay assignment.
	What I've used in the past
Other: Reading Assessment	To be able to see what they can do with writing and reading before instruction began.

- My embedded tutor is CRUCIAL in helping my students to succeed! I am beyond thrilled with the program. I want an embedded tutor for every class I teach!
- Tutor provides verbal feedback on drafts - I have asked that she not email papers back and forth with students. They must meet with her via Zoom through the TLC portal.

Q23: Please comment about embedded tutors

A GREAT RESOURCE

- The tutor is very helpful, and I anticipate it being more so as we return to the classroom and get more comfortable with the concept.
- I want my embedded tutor for all future classes. It completely transformed how I teach and how my students succeed. It was the best thing I have ever seen!
- I think some students have appreciated the peer tutor's presence in our online class.
- I find that my tutor has been very helpful, and helps ensure students get more one-on-one help.
- I am extremely happy with my tutor. She is dedicated and even caught an instance of plagiarism.
- Having the embedded tutor makes a big difference for my students. They get an additional point of view, and some are more comfortable accessing tutoring services with a known tutor rather than meeting with a "stranger."
- Having an embedded tutor in 101 is very helpful for modeling effective online student behavior and the tutor provides thoughtful feedback to students.

CAN IMPROVE ON EMBEDDED TUTORING

- Notification of this program was kind of last minute, so it does feel like there has been some scrambling. We are still feeling our way, since this has only been in place for about 7 weeks. In the future, I will have a better idea of what me and my assigned tutor can achieve together to support students.
- My tutor is great, but he is very busy and not available enough. So he's not able to give feedback on assignments or discussions and has limited time for tutoring sessions. The students also under-utilize the tutor no matter how much we reach out to them.
- I think we have more work to do coming up with best practices for embedded tutoring. It is very valuable and I look forward to bolstering ENGL 101 with their help!
- I am somewhat on the fence about having a tutor in my future ENGL 101 classes. I think the concept works better in a live class than an asynchronous class. It's not always easy to find something for them to do every week, and because they aren't a TA, they don't always know what the reading materials are. I can't expect them to read the full length non-fiction book because they won't be compensated for that labor. So, the advice they can give on some of the classwork is limited.

- While I do appreciate the English 101 resources on our department page, I honestly think we have huge gaps that should be filled. I would like to see how teachers are creating 5-week assignments and syllabi, 8-week assignments and syllabi, online only vs OnLive assignments and syllabi, and more. I think that we should encourage MORE adjuncts to submit what they are doing, too. I think that having a wider variety of ideas is helpful. Finding new assignment ideas and syllabus ideas is useful. I would like to see other ways teachers are using technology, too. One thing that would help is to record the SkillShare workshops and post them on the 101 resource page. That way, we can see the workshops if we can't meet at that time. Finally, it would be nice if we could have more OER resources for zero cost textbooks. Is there any way that the English Department meetings can be recorded, too? It's hard to attend them when we teach at the same time they are held. We can feel like we are pretty isolated when we can't connect with our peers.
- Trainings from faculty on how to use utilize Canvas pedagogically
- Being updated briefly on Changes in the Canvas platform.

Q: Please indicate additional resources, or help that you need to teach English 101 more effectively?

The SkillShare workshops have been very helpful; it's nice to meet with colleagues and talk about our teaching a few times a month. Special thanks to Alene for her organization and persistence on this!

- Smaller class size x 3
- More OER materials.
- Embedded Tutors in all courses
- A common grading rubric for essays.
- More connection to noncredit courses (001 and 002).

More freedom/less control from coordinators

Just more ideas as to what works and what doesn't

I have been noticing that during the pandemic and online teaching and learning that students seem to be more emboldened to disrespect instructors. I have always felt that administration could do more to communicate an atmosphere of respect for faculty that would permeate campus culture.

More institutional support, generally. Not only do we need less than 30 people in the classroom, we need a culture shift. The STEM fields get lots of support in the form of a separate tutoring center (MESA), early registration for those MESA students, and new buildings. How does the administration value writing and show that value? I've seen no sign of it.

Can't think of any/ none/I think we're fine the way we are.

Q: Please indicate if you have any additional comments or feedback regarding the English 101 Course?

More mandated assignments will make it harder for teachers to give the class in a way that works for them. Academic freedom and diversity in instruction is good for students, rather than imposing a homogenizing course.

I'm finding that many students are extremely underprepared for the expectations, workload, and time-intensive nature of the course. Students often struggle not only in the beginning but throughout the course and no matter how much I email them to check in or cheer them on, they cannot keep up.

I believe classes would improve if instructors had more academic freedom to choose the materials they wish to teach.

1. Assign rhetorical assignments in the second half of the semester. Emphasis on teaching rhetorical strands to unsophisticated writers at the beginning of the semester is ineffective.
